Combining multiple aerial images together into interrupted, non-linear but cohesive models, I’m attempting to derive a new landscape that can be experienced both literally and metaphorically.”

Learning to Fly:
A Festival of the Arts and Sciences
Cargo Cults with Ron Lippi
7 pm, UWMC Auditorium
During World War II, thousands of American GIs descended on the Melanesian Archipelago bearing with them unimaginable riches. The South Sea islanders yearned for the return of abundance and built sky-planes of grass in an attempt to conjure back their god-like visitors. This is the origin of the fascinating mid-twentieth century religious movement called the “Cargo Cult.” Join UWMC Professor of Anthropology Ron Lippi to explore how the “magic” of flight helped give rise to the movement.
